

Frequently Asked Questions From Seminar Attendees

How can the student learn Craniosacral Fascial Therapy in just 3 days?

This seminar is very hands-on intensive, which gives the student a solid grasp of the clinical approach.

What is the lasting value that the student will receive from the seminar?

The student can have a life-long skill that almost everyone on the planet needs. Everyone has a brain and fascia, and everyone experiences trauma. Secondly, some people have taken the training and have made a career out of this work. Considering today's educational costs, it's a bargain in that respect. Lastly, the student has the opportunity to help people with incurable diseases. The feeling of helping someone heal is priceless.

Does the student need a medical background to take the seminar?

No. We have many lay parents who take the seminar to work on their children and extended family. They leave the seminar qualified to do CFT.

Will the student be able to do CFT effectively after the seminar?

Yes, with two very important caveats. She/he has to go home and practice it in the real world. The student has to use it or lose it. It is also critical for the student to leave the seminar with a positive frame of mind that he/she can do the work. Any doubts or insecurities within the student can present a problem. If you do not think that you can do something, then you can't do it. The work can be very powerful, and the student must be on board with his or her own mental capabilities.

Will insurance pay for CFT?

It will generally not, even if a child improves. This work is cutting-edge and is not recognized by insurance companies at the present time.
